Today, with the strong affirming vote and support of the American Osteopathic Association House of Delegates, we officially move forward with the AOA and the American Association of Colleges of Osteopathic Medicine (AACOM) on the path to implement the Memorandum of Understanding creating a single accreditation system for all GME programs in the United States. We continue to firmly believe that this single accreditation system will foster greater accountability to the American public for the outcomes that are needed in the health care delivery system of the future. And, it provides the greatest opportunity for optimization of use of the GME resources provided by the public to the profession, and maximizes opportunities for the residents of today and tomorrow.

We look forward to this new era in graduate medical education and will communicate with you through this website in the days and weeks to come about important next steps and timing in the transition process.

If you have specific questions when the details of the transition process are defined and shared, please direct your queries to info@acgme.org.
