Autopsy suite

Residents have an opportunity to study slides of the surgical pathology specimens they gross before they are read and reported by an attending.

Residents are given responsibility for call during clinical pathology assignments.

Residents have opportunity to serve as a clinical pathology consultant to other services.

Residents have opportunity to serve as an anatomic pathology consultant to other services.

Residents have adequate faculty support ("backup") during call assignments.

Residents are given a written statement of the program's educational goals, required rotations, and supervision guidelines.

Residents have 24-hour access to pathology reference materials at all program institutions.

Residents are encouraged to become involved in clinical or laboratory research.

The program provides guidance and technical support (eg, research design, statistical analysis) for resident research.

Pathology subspecialty residents (ie, fellows) rotating on the pathology service do not have an adverse impact on the education of residents.
