Section V

Graduate Medical Education Teaching Institutions

Section V lists hospitals and organizations that sponsor graduate medical education (GME) programs or participate in GME. Sponsoring institutions assume final responsibility for a GME program. Most GME programs are sponsored by specific clinical departments within a hospital, another health care institution such as a medical school, or an educational consortium. Major participating institutions include hospitals or other sites recognized by at least one residency review committee as providing a major portion of required GME. Hospitals and other institutions that provide rotations of less than one-sixth of the program length or less than a total of 6 months are not listed in the Directory.

All institutions that sponsor GME programs or participate in GME are listed in alphabetical order by state and city. Each listing includes the institution name, address, and identification code. Also provided are codes of medical schools affiliated with each institution (where applicable) and abbreviations for the specialty and subspecialty programs affiliated with each institution. (A key for specialty and subspecialty abbreviation codes is provided on the inside front cover of this Directory).

Candidates seeking a residency should refer to the list of programs in Section III. Applications for a residency position should be addressed to the program director rather than to an institution.

Relationships Between Hospitals and Medical Schools (Medical School Affiliation)

Hospitals that sponsor an accredited program are not required to have a formal relationship with a medical school. Where such a relationship exists, the affiliation is identified by the dean of the medical school as M (major), G (graduate only), or L (limited). The medical school associated with the code number in this listing is identified in Appendix D.

Major affiliation (M) signifies that an institution is an important part of the teaching program of the medical school and is a major unit in the clinical clerkship program. Major teaching institutions provide clerkship experience in two or more of the major specialties: internal medicine, surgery, pediatrics, and obstetrics-gynecology. An institution responsible for most of the teaching in a single specialty, such as psychiatry or pediatrics, may also be considered a major affiliation. In a major teaching institution, medical students serve clinical clerkships regularly on inpatient services, under the direct supervision of medical school faculty. A major teaching institution may or may not be used for medical school residencies.

Graduate affiliation (G) indicates that the institution is affiliated with the medical school only for its graduate programs and that one or more of the following arrangements is in effect:

1. House staff of the GME programs are selected by officials of a medical school department or by a joint committee of the institution teaching staff and medical school faculty.

2. Medical school faculty (other than the institution’s attending staff) are regularly scheduled to participate in the teaching programs of the institution. No graduate affiliation is indicated if medical school faculty participation at the institution is limited to an occasional lecture or consultation visit, or if the institution’s residents attend medical school teaching conferences only as visitors.

3. A contractual arrangement (with or without financial commitment) specifies the medical school participation in the organization and supervision of the GME program in the institution.

4. There is some degree of exchange of residents between this institution and the principal teaching institution of the medical school.

Limited affiliation (L) signifies that the institution is affiliated with the medical school’s teaching program only for brief and/or unique rotations of students or residents.

Combined Specialty programs in two or more specialties are approved by each respective specialty board; resident physicians completing these programs are eligible for board certification. The Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education (ACGME) and its Residency Review Committees do not accredit combined programs; instead, they separately accredit the core specialty programs that form the combined program. In 2001, the ACGME began to list all active combined programs in its accreditation database and on its Web site (www.acgme.org); program information is also available via the AMA’s FREIDA Online Web site at www.ama-assn.org/go/freida. Requests for information about the guidelines for these programs should be directed to the specialty boards at the addresses listed in Appendix B. Applicants to combined specialty programs are encouraged to review requirements for admission to the certification process of each board, also listed in Appendix B.

Diagnostic Radiology/Nuclear Medicine/Nuclear Radiology
The American Board of Radiology (ABR) and the American Board of Nuclear Medicine (ABNM) offer dual certification for candidates who have satisfactorily completed a combined total of 6 years of suitable accredited training in programs approved by both boards and successfully passed the certifying examination of both boards.

To be eligible for dual certification, a resident must obtain residency training in diagnostic radiology and nuclear medicine that must include a) a preparatory clinical year in an ACGME-accredited program and b) 4 years of education in an ACGME-accredited diagnostic radiology program that includes 6 months of nuclear medicine training, followed by c) 1 year of education in a combined nuclear medicine and nuclear radiology program. Certifying examinations of each board cannot be taken until all required years of training in both specialties are satisfactorily completed.

Internal Medicine/Dermatology
The American Board of Internal Medicine and the American Board of Dermatology offer dual certification for candidates who fulfill the requirements of both boards by completing joint training in 5 years. All 5 years should be completed in the same combined program; exceptions must be approved in advance by both boards. Applicants may not take the certifying examinations until all required years in both specialties have been completed.

Internal Medicine/Emergency Medicine
The American Board of Internal Medicine and the American Board of Emergency Medicine offer dual certification for candidates who have completed at least 2½ years of suitable accredited training in each specialty. A combined residency consists of 5 years of balanced education in the two disciplines. It is strongly recommended that the participating residencies be in the same academic health center.

To be eligible for dual certification, the resident must satisfactorily complete 60 months of combined education, which must be verified by the directors of both programs. The certifying examinations cannot be taken until all 5 years are completed.

Internal Medicine/Emergency Medicine/Critical Care Medicine
The American Board of Internal Medicine and the American Board of Emergency Medicine offer triple certification for candidates who complete a 6-year (72-month) integrated, coherent program of combined training in internal medicine, emergency medicine, and critical care medicine, approved by both boards.
Upon successful completion and verification of the first 5 years of this program, candidates may apply to take the certification examinations in internal medicine and emergency medicine. To meet eligibility for certification in critical care medicine, the candidate must: 1) have satisfactorily completed the 6-year combined program; 2) be certified by the American Board of Internal Medicine; and 3) have met the certification requirements of the American Board of Emergency Medicine.

Internal Medicine/Family Practice

The American Board of Internal Medicine and the American Board of Family Practice offer dual certification for candidates who have satisfactorily completed 4 years of combined training in programs approved by both boards.

To be eligible for dual certification, combined residency training in internal medicine and family practice must include at least 48 months of balanced education in the two disciplines and be verified by the training director(s) of the program. The written certifying examinations cannot be taken until all required years in both specialties are completed.

Internal Medicine/Neurology

The American Board of Internal Medicine and the American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology offer dual certification for candidates who have completed 5 years of combined training suitable to both boards. A combined residency in internal medicine and neurology must include at least 5 years of coherent education integral to residencies in the two disciplines. It is strongly recommended that the participating residencies be in the same institution.

To meet eligibility for dual certification, the resident must satisfactorily complete 60 months of training, which must be verified by the directors of both programs. The written certifying examinations cannot be taken until all required years in both specialties are satisfactorily completed.

Internal Medicine/Nuclear Medicine

The American Board of Internal Medicine and the American Board of Nuclear Medicine offer a training pathway for candidates who have completed 4 years of combined accredited training in internal medicine and nuclear medicine leading to admisibility to certification in both specialties. To meet eligibility for dual certification, the resident must satisfactorily complete 48 months of combined training that is verified by the directors of both training programs. It is strongly recommended that combined training occur in the same institution. Residents will be eligible for admission to the written certifying examination in internal medicine after successfully completing the R-3 year of training and for the nuclear medicine examination after the R-4 year.

Internal Medicine/Pediatrics

The American Board of Internal Medicine and the American Board of Pediatrics offer dual certification in internal medicine and pediatrics. A combined residency must include at least 2 years in each specialty, for a total of 4 years of coherent training integral to residencies in the two disciplines. The participating residencies should be in the same academic health center. Continuity clinics in each specialty should be provided throughout the 4 years.

To meet eligibility requirements for dual certification, the resident must satisfactorily complete 48 months of combined education, and clinical competence in both specialties must be verified by the directors of both programs. The certifying examinations cannot be taken until all required years in both specialties are satisfactorily completed.

Internal Medicine/Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation

The American Board of Internal Medicine and the American Board of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation offer dual certification for candidates who have completed at least 2½ years of suitable accredited training in each specialty. A combined residency must include at least 5 years of coherent training integral to residencies in the two disciplines. It is strongly recommended that the participating residencies be in the same institution.

To meet eligibility requirements for dual certification, the resident must satisfactorily complete 60 months of combined education, which must be verified by the directors of both programs. The written certifying examinations cannot be taken until required training in a specialty has been satisfactorily completed. The certifying examination in internal medicine cannot be taken prior to the fall of the fifth year in the combined program.

Internal Medicine/Preventive Medicine

The American Board of Internal Medicine (ABIM) and the American Board of Preventive Medicine (ABPM) offer dual certification for candidates who have completed a minimum of 4 years of accredited training in combined internal medicine/preventive medicine programs that meet the Guidelines for Combined Internal Medicine - Preventive Medicine Residency Training Programs approved by ABPM and ABIM. In addition to satisfactory completion of the combined training programs, applicants for the ABPM certifying examination must have completed the required year of preventive medicine practice to qualify.

Internal Medicine/Psychiatry

The American Board of Internal Medicine and the American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology offer dual certification in internal medicine and psychiatry. A combined residency must include at least 5 years of coherent education integral to residencies in the two disciplines. Participating residencies must be in the same institution.

To meet eligibility requirements for dual certification, the resident must satisfactorily complete 60 months of combined education, which must be verified by the directors of both programs. The written certifying examinations cannot be taken until all required years of training in both specialties are satisfactorily completed.

Neurology/Nuclear Medicine

The American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology and the American Board of Nuclear Medicine offer dual certification in neurology and nuclear medicine. A combined residency must include 5 years of combined education. It is strongly recommended that the participating residencies be in the same institution.

To qualify for dual certification, the resident must satisfactorily complete 60 months of combined education, which must be verified by the respective directors of both programs. The written certifying examinations may not be taken until all required years of training in both specialties are satisfactorily completed.

Neurology/Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation

The American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology and the American Board of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation offer dual certification in neurology and physical medicine and rehabilitation. A combined residency must include 5 years of combined education. This combined training must follow a year in a residency program that meets the requirements for neurology and should be completed in the same institution. All required years in both specialties must be satisfactorily completed prior to admission to the certifying examinations of each board.
Neurology/Diagnostic Radiology/Neuroradiology
The American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology and the American Board of Radiology offer certification in neurology, diagnostic radiology, and neuroradiology. The combined residency must include at least 7 years of coherent training integral to all three residencies. It is recommended that the participating residencies be in the same academic health center.

To meet eligibility requirements for triple certification, the resident must satisfactorily complete 84 months of combined training, which must be verified by the directors of each program. Lacking verification of acceptable clinical competence in the combined program, the resident must satisfactorily complete the standard length of residency training and all other requirements before each certifying examination may be taken. Applicants may not take the certifying examination until all required years of training have been completed. In order to be eligible for the neuroradiology exam, a resident must have completed certification in both diagnostic radiology and neurology.

Pediatrics/Dermatology
The American Board of Pediatrics and the American Board of Dermatology offer dual certification for candidates who fulfill the requirements of both boards by completing joint training in 5 years. All 5 years should be completed in the same combined program; exceptions must be approved in advance by both boards. Applicants may not take the certifying examinations until all required years in both specialties have been completed.

Pediatrics/Emergency Medicine
The American Board of Pediatrics and the American Board of Emergency Medicine offer dual certification for candidates who fulfill the requirements of both boards by completing joint training in 5 years. All 5 years should be completed in the same combined program; exceptions must be approved in advance by both boards. Applicants may not take the certifying examinations until all required years in both specialties have been completed.

Pediatrics/Medical Genetics
The American Board of Pediatrics and the American Board of Medical Genetics offer dual certification for candidates who fulfill the requirements of both boards by completing joint training in 5 years. All 5 years should be completed in the same combined program; exceptions must be approved in advance by both boards. Applicants may not take the certifying examinations until all required years in both specialties have been completed.

Pediatrics/Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation
The American Board of Pediatrics and the American Board of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation permit applicants interested in pediatric rehabilitation to qualify for admission to the certifying examinations of both boards by completing a 5-year combined program. All 5 years should be completed at one academic institution; exceptions must be approved in advance by both boards.

Applicants may not take the certifying examinations until all required years in both specialties have been completed.

Pediatrics/Psychiatry/Child and Adolescent Psychiatry
The American Board of Pediatrics, the American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology, and the Committee on Certification in Child and Adolescent Psychiatry have developed a committee that is overseeing training via a different format. This is a 5-year curriculum with 24 months of pediatrics, 18 months of adult psychiatry, and 18 months of child and adolescent psychiatry. Completion of the program will satisfy the training requirement for certification in all three areas. Applicants pursuing training in these programs may not take the certifying examinations until all training has been completed. Credit for training via this route may be obtained only by training in one of these programs.

Psychiatry/Family Practice
The American Board of Family Practice and the American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology offer dual certification in family practice and psychiatry. A combined residency in family practice and psychiatry must include at least 5 years of coherent training integral to residencies in the two disciplines. It is required that the combined training be under the aegis of the same academic institution.

To meet eligibility for dual certification, the resident must satisfactorily complete 60 months of combined training, which must be verified by the directors of both programs. The certifying examinations may not be taken until all required years of training in both specialties are satisfactorily completed.

Psychiatry/Neurology
The American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology has established guidelines for combined training in psychiatry and neurology. A combined residency must include one postgraduate year (PGY1) of training that is acceptable to neurology plus a minimum of 5 years of combined residency training. The 5 years of residency training are usually taken at one approved institution but may be taken at no more than two approved institutions.

Medical Specialty Board Certification Requirements

Twenty-four medical specialty boards have been approved by the American Board of Medical Specialties (ABMS) and the American Medical Association (AMA) Council on Medical Education through the Liaison Committee for Specialty Boards (LCSB). Applications for recognition as a specialty board are submitted to the LCSB and reviewed for compliance with the requirements and criteria published in the Essentials for Approval of New Examining Boards in Medical Specialties approved by both the ABMS and the AMA. If an applicant is approved for recognition as a medical specialty board by the LCSB, the application must then be approved by the membership of the ABMS and the AMA Council on Medical Education. The Essentials may be obtained from the office of the Executive Vice President of the ABMS, 1007 Church St/Ste 404, Evanston, IL 60201-5913, or from the Council on Medical Education, AMA, 515 N State St, Chicago, IL 60610.

The primary objective of medical specialty boards is the improvement of the quality of medical education and medical care. The primary functions of each of the medical specialty boards are to evaluate candidates in a medical specialty field who voluntarily appear for examination and to certify as diplomates those candidates who are qualified. To accomplish these functions, medical specialty boards determine whether candidates have received adequate preparation in accordance with established educational standards; provide comprehensive examinations designed to assess knowledge, skills, and experience required to provide quality patient care in that specialty; and certify those candidates who have satisfied the requirements.

In collaboration with the other organizations and agencies concerned, the approved medical specialty boards assist in improving the quality of medical education by elevating the standards of graduate medical education and approving facilities for specialty training.

The actual accreditation review for the approval of residency programs in each specialty is conducted by a Residency Review Committee on which the respective specialty board has equal representation with the AMA Council on Medical Education and, in some cases, with a related specialty society.

Medical specialty board certification is an additional process to receiving a medical degree, completing residency training, and receiving a license to practice medicine.
